

VILLA HAND GLAZED “CUERDA SECA” STYLE TILES

When different coloured glazes are applied to a ceramic surface, the glazes tend to run together during the firing process. In the “cuerva seca” technique, the glazes are separated on the surface to prevent them running out of their delineated areas. This technique was developed in the 15th century to prevent coloured glazes from running together, allowing for the creation of intricate coloured tile designs.

This Cuerva Seca technique is still used today to create the beautiful Villa hand glazed Cuerva Seca style tiles. These Villa hand glazed tiles are perfect for custom tile work in entryway murals, swimming pool tiling, kitchen backsplashes, and bathrooms with a difference.
